Ohio twisters leave 1 dead, many hurt as Midwest preps for more

One twister hit Dayton and another touched near Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

A spate of tornadoes pulverized buildings in western Ohio early on Tuesday, killing one person, injuring scores of others and requiring emergency officials to send out snowplows to clear debris from a major highway, officials and media reports said.

At least one tornado hit Dayton and at least two touched down near the city, including one near Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, just east of the city, media reports said, part of a series of storms that have ravaged the Midwest in recent days.

There was a risk of more tornadoes and hailstorms from Tuesday afternoon into the night in Kansas and other Midwest states, while residents in Arkansas and Oklahoma braced for more record-breaking floods, the National Weather Service (NWS) said.

Sue Taulbee, 71, was watching television in her bed in the Dayton suburb of Brookline when she heard the telltale sounds of an approaching twister.

"They say it's like a freight train: That's what I heard," she recalled on Tuesday afternoon. She hid at the foot of the bed. Flying debris smashed her window and she was soon trapped as her home collapsed around her.

"It was only a couple of minutes, but it seemed like an hour," she said as she sat in her yard, surrounded by her scattered possessions. "I just started screaming and my neighbors heard me and said, 'Sue! Sue! I hear you!'"

We're coming! We're coming!"

They pulled her out through a hole and brought her to a hospital to get a laceration on her head treated, she said.

At least one of the tornadoes reached wind speeds of 140 mph, the NWS said.

An 81-year-old man was killed in Celina, a small city 65 miles north of Dayton, after a tornado sent a vehicle crashing into his home, Celina Mayor Jeffrey Hazel said at a news conference on Tuesday. Another seven people were injured in the storm, three of them seriously, he said. About 40 homes in Celina were seriously damaged or destroyed, Hazel said.

At least 45 people in and around Dayton went to hospitals with injuries, most of them minor, according to Elizabeth Long, a spokeswoman for the Kettering Health Net-

"We've had injuries ranging from lacerations to bumps and bruises from folks being thrown around in their houses due to the storms," she said.

The latest storm follows tornadoes and floods that killed at least three people in Missouri and six people in Oklahoma during the previous week, including two people in El Reno on Saturday.

More than 65,000 homes and businesses in Ohio were left without power on Monday morning, according to the PowerOutage.US tracking service, and officials advised people to boil water after water plants and pumps went out of service.

Flooded areas of Arkansas and Oklahoma were bracing for more rain that will feed the already swollen Arkansas River, forecasters said on Tuesday. Up to 19 inches of rain have fallen so far in parts of Oklahoma over the month of May, the NWS said, with more on the way.

Arkansas, Oklahoma and Missouri all have activated National Guard units to respond to the storms. REUTERS

Belgian ex-king submits paternity test sample

2 Belgium's former king has submitted a DNA sample demanded from a woman who says she is his daughter after a court ordered him to pay $5,586 a day if he failed to do so. King Albert II, 84, agreed to submit a sample even though he is challenging at the supreme court a ruling that has resulted in him having to take a paternity test, lawyer Alain Berenboom said on Tuesday. "He noted that the court had decided that the conclusions of this examination would be strictly confidential until a new judicial decision," Berenboom said in a statement. The retired monarch, who abdicated six years ago in favor of his son Philippe, has been fighting the paternity claim of Belgian artist Delphine Boel, 51, for over a decade. His lawyers argue it is premature for him to take a paternity test while Boel still has a legal father, Jacques Boel, scion of one of Belgium's richest industrial dynasties. REUTERS

Zuckerberg snubs fuming Canadian lawmakers

3 Canadian lawmakers fumed on Tuesday when Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg snubbed an invitation to Ottawa to testify on privacy and democracy before an international panel, slapping the billionaire with a standing summons. It was the second time in six months Zuckerberg and Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg have failed to show up when invited to address a committee of international lawmakers investigating disinformation, privacy and how to protect democracy. Zuckerberg and Sandberg will be served with a formal summons should they "decide to come to Canada to go fishing," said Canada's Charlie Angus, a parliamentarian for the left-leaning New Democratic Party. "It's not good enough for them to blow us off." If the two do not comply, parliament could hold them in contempt, but it would be mainly a symbolic move. REUTERS

Amazon's Boston Seaport office breaks ground

4 Boston may have lost out in the competition to lure Amazon's second headquarters to the city, but the Seattle-based tech giant plans to hire 2,000 employees to work in a new Seaport office tower beginning in 2021. Gov. Charlie Baker and Boston Mayor Marty Walsh helped Amazon and WS Development break ground on a new 17-story, 525,000-square-foot office tower Tuesday that will add to a neighborhood already bustling with new workers and companies. The building going up off Congress Street — the new address is 111 Harbor Way — will be built on one of the few remaining undeveloped parcels in the neighborhood. And the jobs are expected to be focused in the areas of software development, machine learning, speech science and robotics engineering. "The project benefits everyone in the city of Boston," Walsh said. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Sports betting on the rise in Mass., says state's Gaming Commission

Which sports can be bet on in the state will be discussed.

Sports betting has been on the rise in Massachusetts over the last five or so years, the chair of the Massachusetts Gaming Commission said Tuesday as lawmakers start to dig into the weighty questions around another proposed expansion of gaming in the Bay State.

In 2013 and 2014, 12.6 percent of Massachusetts residents had placed a bet on a sporting event in the last year, Gaming Commission Chairwoman Cathy Judd-Stein said Tuesday morning. By 2015 that percentage had climbed to 17.9 percent before falling back to 16.9 percent in 2016, she said, citing the commission's research into the topic.

As the Committee on Economic Development and Emerging Technologies begins two days of hearings on the handful of pending bills that would make sports betting legal, Gaming Commission Associate Counsel Justin Stempeck laid out a number of issues for policymakers to keep in mind: Which sports can be bet on? Will the state take bets on college games? What about betting on eSports or competitive video gaming? Should sports be defined in statute or in regulation? Should the state mandate the use of official league data? Should players be able to bet online in addition to the state's physical casinos?

"It's an issue with great interest and we are looking forward to a thorough examination of the topic. It will be a great learning exercise for all of us on the committee," Senate co-chair Sen. Eric Lesser said. "This is a fairly new issue for the country and the commonwealth in particular. We are here roughly one year after the Supreme Court decision that made this all possible so there is a lot to learn and we look forward to learning it in the next two days."

Eight states, including Rhode Island, currently accept legal bets. Gov. Charlie Baker earlier this year proposed a bill that would allow pro sports betting at licensed casinos in Massachusetts and through online platforms like DraftKings.

"It's an important issue to the commonwealth. It's one that surely contains economic

The Gotobeds make the perfect post-punk mixtape on 'Debt Begins at 30'

The Pittsburgh band enlisted a cast of indie-rock guest singers for their fantastic new record.

patrick.king@metro.us

Pittsburgh band The Gotobeds have been pounding eardrums with their brand of haywire post-punk since their debut, "People Are Revolting," back in 2014. Their tight, scrappy songs and fun-loving, devil-may-care mischievous live shows have made them a favorite on the scene for years, and with their newest record, "Debt Begins at 30," out this Friday on Sub Pop, the band has invited some pretty high-profile friends to join the party.

With a slew of grade

A-pedigree indie-rock guest singers such as Joe Casey of Protomartyr, Bob Nastanovich of Pavement, Tim Midyett of Chicago indie-rock legends Silkstorm, Victoria Ruiz of Downtown Boys, and an arsenal of other great voices and musicians, the band has created the indie-rock equivalent of a hip-hop mixtape. The songs flow in and out with a large cast of characters coming in and out to add to the narrative in meaningful ways that never wear out their welcome.

"As the guy that gets things done in the band, the reason you're talking to me instead of the other dudes," says lead singer and guitarist Eli Kasar, of the ambitious undertaking of the new record. "At one point we're at practice and I remember somebody had said, 'We all like rap. Why don't we make a record like a rap record where every song has a guest?" It's like a mixtape. It's a Gotobeds record, but we're going to have these people on it. So we were like, 'Good idea!' Then, no joke, I'm starting to think of perfect guests and I would suggest people. I would say it wasn't until we got to the third or fourth guest, I was just giving the guys a heads-up [saying], 'Hey, I have to pay an engineer $200 to record someone's vocals.' Then Cary [Belback], our drummer, was like, 'For what?' I was like, 'For their guest spot.' He was like, 'Who all is on the record?' So I started rattling some names off. He was like, 'Oh, are we doing that?' I'm the wrong person to suggest something to because if I think you're game to do it, I'm going to do it to the best of my ability. It kind of happened in not a joke way, but we fell into it I guess."

While the band has enlisted help from some heavy hitters to add color to the record, Kasar is amazed at how organically it all came together. Each guest agreed to be a part of the project out of sheer admiration and respect for one of the most exciting bands around.

"Although it might seem like starf—ing, I will say the people that are on the record are people that we have met and interacted with, were already talking and hanging out with us," says Kasar. "I don't think there was anybody that wasn't a friend or a fan already."

The title of the record is a play on the 1980 documentary on the Pittsburgh punk scene by artist and filmmaker Stephanie Beroes, "Debt Begins at 20." But as the band was writing material for the album, Kasar found that while it would be nice to be in on the reference, the lyrical themes of taking on debt while chasing artistic pursuits could stand on their own.

"It was a somewhat joke for us as we get older. It does get harder. We're certainly not taking this [playing in the band] as a career. We don't make any moves with that stuff in mind. It's cool that people could get the reference, but it could stand on its own. We're indebted to our friends who helped us make this record. We're indebted to our partners who put up for us being gone for long stretches. We're also in financial debt [laughs]."

"Debt Begins at 30" by The Gotobeds comes out this Friday, May 31.

Make your own green cosmetics

Melt a little coconut oil, add a drop of cornflower blue and a few drops of rosewater: It is a perfect makeup remover for your eyes. Mix this same coconut oil with a pinch of baking soda and lavender essential oil for an effective deodorant.

CHLOÉ MACHILLOT, MWN

Thanks to the abundant supply of ingredients and recipes that are now available on the internet and in specialty supermarkets, the "do it yourself" trend has invaded the world of cosmetics. More and more people are advocating for the return of natural and homemade products, motivated by the goal of a healthier and more economical lifestyle. Who says you have to pollute to be beautiful?

"Handmade cosmetics have been in fashion for the last two years, probably thanks to all the blogs that promote a natural and minimalist daily life," Andréanne Laurin, executive director and co-founder of the Montreal-based chain of organic zero-waste grocery stores dubbed LOCO, explained to Metro. "We see it in our stores: Customers demand more and more raw materials to make their own products, as well as tips and recipes."

This movement, also

Some precautions

• Control the expiration date of the products.

"Homemade cosmetics are made with fresh ingredients and without preservatives. You have to get used to keeping them in the fridge and smelling them before using," Mariane Gaudreau suggested.

• Avoid contact with water.

"Water is naturally a source of bacteria. If you take cream from a jar with wet fingers, for example, you can have a bad surprise the next time you use it!"

• Comply with the contraindications of essential oils.

"They are composed of powerful active ingredients and potentially harmful for children, pregnant or breastfeeding women," the expert emphasized.

known as natural cosmetics, promotes ecological beauty based on natural ingredients, such as vegetable oils, floral waters, clays and essential oils. Therefore, it has an impact on several trendy lifestyles: zero-waste, veganism and local consumption among them.

"Everyone is benefiting. And that explains the success," Mariane Gaudreau, co-founder of the eco-responsible blog Les Trappeuses de Montreal, founded in 2014, stated.

The practice requires a small basic investment since most of the products could be used to make several cosmetics. Gaudreau recommends starting with ingredients that have multiple properties, such as coconut oil (antibacterial), shea butter (moisturizing), baking soda (antiseptic) and a trio of "absolute" essential oils: lavender, peppermint and tea tree.

Some people even manage to create mascara, colored with coal or cocoa, and lipstick with beet juice.

"Certainly, it takes more time than going to a pharmacy, but you can make a makeup remover, a lip balm or a shampoo — a solid solution for a very small investment compared to the price of the store," Laurin added.

Although the adventure could seem scary for some people, it always ends up satisfying since there are many advantages.

"Whether it is a small mixture or a complex preparation, it is always a great satisfaction to have done it by yourself," Gaudreau concluded.

SPORTS

The Bruins and Blues will tangle again tonight at the Garden.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Bruins have seemingly shaken off the rust from their 10-day layoff ahead of the 2019 Stanley Cup Final as they toppled the Blues, 4-2, in Game 1 Monday night at the Garden.

One cautious tale that B's fans should take in ahead of Game 2 tonight (8 p.m., NBCSN), however, is that in last year's Cup Final the Vegas Golden Knights toppled the Washington Capitals in Game 1 of their series. Vegas came into that series with the longer break, having been off for seven days. But the Caps made the necessary adjustments in Game 2 and then proceeded to rattle off three more victories to ultimately take the series in five games.

In other words, this one ain't over yet by a long shot.

For the Bruins to sustain the success they enjoyed in Game 1 they'll no doubt need Tuukka Rask and their defensemen to continue to play at an elite level.

Despite giving up the first two goals of Game 1, Rask was again sharp overall. He finished with 18 saves.

The 20 shots that Rask saw on Monday were the least amount of shots he's seen in the entire playoffs, and the B's defensive corps deserves plenty of credit for that. Charlie McAvoy, Brandon Carlo, Torey Krug, Matt Grzelcyk, Connor Clifton and Zdeno Chara all contributed greatly in stifling Vladimir Tarasenko, Ryan O'Reilly, David Perron, Brayden Schenn, Jaden Schwartz and company.

Three of the biggest plays of the night for the Bruins were made by that defensive contingent as Clifton got the

Bruins seeking 2-0 lead

Torey Krug levels St. Louis center Robert Thomas in Game 1 Monday at TD Garden.

Bruins on the board in the second period, McAvoy tied the game unassisted with a power play strike in the second, and Krug set the tone for the series when he cleaned the clock of St. Louis center Robert Thomas in the third period.

"Momentum swings [like the hit on Thomas] give your team a boost of energy," Krug said. "I don't know what they were feeling on their bench but if it pushes them back and catches them off-guard then it's great for our team. But I think it gave our team energy and that's all you're trying to do out there. Make little plays throughout the game that pushes your team in the right direction, and that was one of them."

Singing the Blues

The Blues' main focus going into Game 2 tonight will be, first, playing a more disciplined brand of hockey and, second, getting more shots on net. St.

Louis rarely got the puck deep into the Bruins' zone as evidenced by their 20 shot attempts.

"They're a forecheck team," Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy said of the Blues. "That's how they establish territory. I think we just know how to check. I think we've done it to Carolina, Toronto, Columbus. We know how to play winning hockey when we need to and limit the other team's chances."

By comparison, St. Louis goaltender Jordan Binnington saw 37 shots in Game 1 - a whopping 17 more than Rask.

"That's not enough [shots]. He's a world class goaltender," Schenn said of Rask. "We've got to not only shoot more pucks, we didn't get enough traffic around him. Tips, screens, we didn't make it very hard on him [in Game 1]."

Boston outshot St. Louis 18-3 in the second period Monday night, 38-20 for the game. Here's a quick look at key indicator stats compiled by hockey analytics website Natural Stat Trick:

"High Danger Scoring Chances: Boston 10, St. Louis 3. The Blues built their early lead out of virtual vapor, tallying twice despite taking the worst in flow of play. Boston would lead this stat 8-1 after two periods in what was a 2-2 tie at the time. St. Louis picked up a couple of very late chances after pulling its goalie. (The Bruins had one-sided category wins of 17-4 and 12-3 in the Carolina series.)

"Expected Goals: Boston 3.83, St. Louis 1.24. It's hard to be that dominant in a hockey playoff game, particularly when both teams are healthy and fresh. Consistent with the control Boston showed the past few weeks, the Bruins created chances and cashed them in. Their opponent had trouble putting anything together. With all the media chatter about Rask being a "hot goalie," Boston's been pretty hot on the other 190 feet of the rink as well.

Another by-product of Boston's aggression, the Bruins procured more power plays. They scored on one of five chances, compared to zero of two for St. Louis. This after a 7-1 edge over the Hurricanes in power play goals in the Eastern semifinals.

In betting markets, a late-Monday surge of interest in the favorite saw Boston rise from the -155/-160 range all the way up to as high as -175 or -180.

Generally speaking, recreational bettors prefer backing favorites because it's more fun to root for the superior team. After early nerves, "squares" had a lot of fun!

Traditionally, the market would expect to see "zig zag" interest on St. Louis in Wednesday's rematch. The theory goes... the 1-0 series leader lets down with a lead, while the trailer makes adjustments and brings peak intensity.

It's been awhile since Boston zig-zagged. Riding an eight-game winning streak, the red-hot Bruins may discourage old-school betting approaches. In that stretch, Boston leads scoreboard 32-11 without having been favored as high as -190 a single time.

First numbers up at the Westgate in Las Vegas late Monday night for Game 2 showed the Bruins favored at -160 (risk $160 to win $100, or anything in that ratio). St. Louis returned +145 (risk $100 to win $145).

- Aries The lessons of experience coupled with new-found information or skills will help you reach your goal. Strive for perfection and pay close attention to detail. When in doubt, ask for help.
- Taurus Call on someone you know and trust for good advice. Getting a second opinion will put your mind at ease and help you move forward with your plans. Romance is highlighted.
- Gemini Call in a favor if it will help you get things done. An opportunity is only worth your while if it is useful. Don't buy into something that isn't necessary.
- Cancer Emotions will emerge quickly if you feel someone is taking advantage of you. Try not to overreact or get into a dispute when you should just walk away.
- Leo Staying active will help alleviate stress. Greater involvement in something satisfying or beneficial will help you maintain a positive attitude. Be intelligent when dealing with troublemakers.
- Virgo Get involved in something that will improve your standard of living, health or the way you present yourself to the world. Don't overthink what needs to be done; do what feels comfortable.

- Libra Pick up information that will help you make good decisions. Confusion while traveling can be expected and should be countered with preparation.
- Scorpio Take an active role in whatever you do. Partnering with someone who shares your ideas will help you reach your goal without a hitch. Romance will improve your life.
- Sagittarius Rearrange things at home and clear a space for entertainment or a hobby you want to start. Communication will help bring you closer to a loved one.
- Capricorn Make a change for the right reason, not because of an emotional incident or argument. Do what's right and best, not what feeds your ego. Choose peace and love over discord.
- Aquarius Make changes at home that will add to your comfort. Don't feel you must keep up with the neighbors or someone who is prompting you to do something that is risky or unpredictable.
- Pisces The personal changes you make should be made for your own reasons, not because someone else is pressuring you to make them. Moderation will be instrumental in alleviating stress. EUGENIA LAST
